Business and Economics

The University of New Hampshire's Peter T. Paul College of Business and Economics is part of the state's flagship research university and a national leader in experience-based education. It is AACSB accredited, a distinction held by less than 6 percent of the world's business schools. Paul delivers high quality, nationally ranked undergraduate and graduate business programs to approximately 2,900 students. It offers the close community and access to faculty of a smaller business college while also affording the opportunities of a comprehensive R1 research university. Students learn best practices in business and economics and engage in real-world experiences that set them apart in their professions.
